If you're making Mark Cass's bathroom cabinet you'll want to know what he says about Trend shelf supports

TREND SHELF SUPPORTS

I find it's the little things in life that make the difference, and in woodwork – especially furniture making – that's especially true. Attention to detail really pays off, and the discerning customer will always appreciate a touch of quality, however small it may be.

When it comes to adjustable shelving, my preference has long been for the holes and peg method, the Tonk strip system proving to be best suited for institutional shelving in my opinion, and a ton of extra work into the bargain.

Glass shelves require something different again and, although clear plastic clips are OK – and cheap too – I'm never really confident that they're going to last for long, so when I saw these stylish shelf supports from router specialists Trend, I was very pleased indeed. White metal, and with a clear soft plastic sleeve – removable, but why would you want to? – they're just the thing to complement a glass shelf, as well as providing soft contact points. Worth a bit of tracking down – my Trend supplier got them in for me next day – and the price won't kill you.
